

Let me start off by saying that the FCC should leave Indiana's Telephone Privacy law alone. This is the first year that my family hasn't been overwhelmed with telemarketers. Telemarketers call trying to sell something some are polite, but most Telemarketers are extremely rude. You tell them that you aren't interested and they keep talking as if they didn't hear you. With the Indiana's Telephone Privacy law all I have to do is alert the telemarketer that I am on a "NO CALL" list, and that it is illegal for them to call me a second time. After that I never hear from them again. It makes the home life more enjoyable. Once again, I ask that the FCC not to implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law. If the FCC wants to do something constructive that would be appreciated by many they should take Indiana's Telephone Privacy law and push for more states to join. I'm sure that many of you enjoy or would like to enjoy just one week where you don't receive 10 calls from telemarketers. I would like to thank you for your time.
